British in Series of Raids Round Up Victors in Recent Election

The new repressive measures by the British are regarded as the government's answer to the Republican's defiant action in nominating Sinn Fein sheriffs. For the first time the government carried out wholesale raids without assistance from the police. Only soldiers were used.

The prisoners, it was said, would be sent to Wormwood Scrubbs prison, in England, where many political prisoners from Ireland have been confined in the past.

Cabin "Still" Cheered Band of Axmen

"Woodman, spare that still!"
"I will," see he, "if I can——"
But little he knew his illicit brew
Was the quest of a revenue man.
—The Boy Times.

Salem, Jan. 31.—Everything was "still" in the forest around Monserrat and the merry hand of woodmen contentedly plied their axes against the big trees, to level the woods and make a nice landscape to excite the poetic qualities of millionaires who are to live horeabout next Summer.

And then suddenly a "revenuer" walked into the scene, and Octave de Voe is under arrest and one still is as still as any still could be. Octave was brought to Boston and arraigned before the federal commissioner on a charge of working overtime, not as a woodman, but as a one-man 31-gallery and general dispensor of good cheer from his cabin home. He was held in $500 for the Federal Grand Jury.

DR. CANNADAY
Eczema Specialist
for 15 Years.

Also called Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pruritus, Milk Crust, Water Poison, Weeping Skin, etc.

For fifteen years I have been treating one disease alone, ECZEMA. I have handled over one million cases. I do not pretend to know it all, but I am convinced the disease is due to an excess of acid in the blood, and climate related to rheumatism and cancer. This it must be removed.

Eczema is called by some people Itch, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Pruritus, Milk Crust, Weeping Skin, etc. I am fully convinced Eczema is a curable disease, and when I say it can be cured, I mean just what I say — CURED, and not merely patched up for a while to return worse than before. It makes no difference what other doctors have told you, or what all you have tried, all I ask is just a chance to prove to you that this vast experience has taught me a great deal that would be of help to you. If you will write me today I will send you a free trial of my mild, soothing, guaranteed treatment that will do more to convince you than I or anyone else could in a month's preaching. It's all up to you. If you suffer any more with eczema and refuse to merely write to me for free trial, just blame yourself. No matter where you live, I have treated your neighbors. Merely dropping me a postal today is likely to give you more real comfort in a week than you ever expected to enjoy again. Do it right now, your very life may be at stake.

WAGE BOARD TO TAKE UP STRIKE

Settlement of Freight Handlers' Walkout up to Washington, Says Todd

Settlement of the freight handlers' strike rests with the Board of Wages and Working Conditions at Washington, according to a statement issued by Percy A. Todd, district director of the railroads.

Mr. Todd denied that either he or Regional Director Hardin of New York had received any authority from Director-General Hines to effect a settlement. There is little danger of a food shortage as a result of the strike, according to local railroad officials. Food shipments come in carload lots and are not loaded by the consignees. The only freight affected by the walkout is that less than carload lots, they said.

Freight handlers on he New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad continued at work. They have not been called out by officials of the Association of Station Employes. There on the Boston & Maine and Boston & Albany who quit are members of the Freight Handlers' Union.

Coffins have gone up!

Denunciation of the increase in the price of caskets, announced by the National Casket Company, comes from a prominent health official.

ANTI STRIKE BILL SIDETRACKED

Conferees on Railroad Bill Agree on Bipartisan Board to Deal With Labor

By International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Creation of a bi-partisan board of labor adjustment for the settlement of railroad labor differences has been practically agreed upon by the House and Senate conferees on the railroad bill. This agreement removes the possibility of the passage of an anti-strike bill.

Senator Cumins, chairman of the Senate Interstat Commerce Committee, made this statement today.

The general principle of adequate return for the railroads on their investment also has been agreed to by the conferees, although the various elements of detail are far from settlement as when the committee first met in December.

Plans to "Educate" People on Mars

By International News Service.

Hyattsville, Md., Jan. 31.—Now the Martians are going to be educated.

Dr. James Harris Rogers, who has devoted his life to the study of electric waves and who invented the underground and underseas wireless used during the war, declared at his home here today that he was going to undertake to teach the inhabitants of Mars the rudiments of intelligence of this planet. Within a year wireless communication will be established with Mars, Dr. Rogers believes.

"I intend to tune my receiving instruments to 100,000 metres and hope to get signals from other planets," said Dr. Rogers. "All that is being said about radio communication with the planets is of course mere speculation. It is known that electro-magnetic waves travel with the speed of light—186,000 miles a second. The distance at which these waves can be received depends not only upon the power of the transmitting machine, but very largely upon the efficiency of the receiving device.

"Marconi states that the supposed signals from Mars were received on instruments tuned to about 100,000 metres. The longest wave used by us is about 17,000 metres. If the Martians are sending their signals they selected this long wave length so as not to be confused by any signals used on this planet."

Dr. Rogers plans to use numerals first in his communication with Mars, then he will teach the alphabet, next the continental code and finally he will give the Martians the benefit of an education such as the schools of this sphere furnish.

Slight relief was promised in the official forecast, which read:

"Fair and continued cold tonight; Sunday fair, slowly rising temperature, moderate north to northeast winds." Sunday will be cold, however, in the opinion of Forecaster Smith.

Greenville, Me., registered the lowest mark in the United States today with 28 below. It was also the coldest spot in New England. Nantucket was the warmest place in New England with ten above, and was the only place which showed the mercury above zero.

The Wellesley Country Club reported twenty below, Squantum, Melrose and Winthrop fourteen minus, and the mercury at Meeting House Hill dropped twelve degrees under zero.

Similar readings were obtained throughout Greater Boston, the warmest being Chelsea, which showed only four degrees below zero.

The intense cold seriously interfered with train schedules, and trolley car service was badly crippled.

Unfortunate commuters, standing on street corners, suffered severely while hopelessly awaiting the coming of trolleys.

Ears and noses were nipped, and, to add to the discomfort, when a car did arrive it was as cold as the street corners.

Kill the Flu-Breeding Colds

Keeping the Body Fit is Best Preventive Against All Influenza Epidemics

SIMPLE methods and common sense will stop the spread of the devastating Flu and all other epidemics of the Influenza type.

Any one can follow these rules:

Obey cheerfully all public health regulations.
Keep the body fit by sane living.
Kill a cold at the first sneeze or shiver.

The two prime causes of Flu epidemics are colds and lack of resistance because of bad physical condition.

Colds do three things: They provide the best breeding conditions for Flu germs. They make the spreading of the germs and infection of others easy. If neglected they pull the system down.

People who keep physically fit rarely have colds. They have the least to fear from epidemics because they have powers of resistance against the onslaught of germs.

Don't Overlook the Importance of Fresh Air

To keep fit work in fresh air, sleep in it, exercise in it. Regular exercise, plenty of rest and recreation, simple food and fresh air—there you have the best health prescription.

If Colds Come

If, through carelessness or any other reason, a cold does come, act promptly. Take at once

LIEUT. HAMILTON'S BRIDE DEFIES MORGANS TO PROVE CHARGES

GAY LIFE IN PARIS DENIED

Declares She Is a Victim of Mistake in Identity, and Threatens Suit

"I defy the Morgans."

This is the answer of Mrs. Gertrude Warren Hamilton, bride of Laurens Morgan Hamilton, to members of the famous New York Morgan banking family, who declared she led a life of gaiety in Paris.

She says that the woman they have reference to is another "Mrs. Gertrude Warren."

Dispatches from St. Louis say that this is Mrs. Hamilton's third marriage. Her first husband, it is reported, was George Wenzlick, a clerk in the St. Louis City Hall. Later she married Gregory M. Warren, an English army officer, a divorce.

She first became prominent in St. Louis when at eighteen she won first prize in a beauty contest. She is the daughter of Mrs. E. Truelitt.

The bride and groom will leave Boston for the West, to spend the remainder of their honeymoon before declaring they are married, in interview to the Boston American.

Lieutenant Hamilton is a grandson of the late J. Pierpont Morgan and a great-grandson of Alexander Hamilton. His secret marriage to the handsome widow of Gregory Warren, a former California banker, has roused the ire of his proud family. They declare that the new Mrs. Hamilton will never be received into their set.

Every agent of the Morgan syndicate in Europe was assigned to look up the past of Mrs. Gertrude Warren before the family would consent to the marriage of Lieutenant Hamilton "Mrs. Warren" to Paris and to Rome.

The information from Europe caused immediate opposition to the marriage performed in Portsmouth, N. H., by the Rev. Charles Le Vesconte Brine, rector of Christ Episcopal Church.

Lieutenant Hamilton and his bride are indignant. They threaten to bring suits against those who are casting reflections on Mrs. Hamilton's character.

"It's horrid to have these things said about you," Mrs. Hamilton said. "I defy the Morgans. They are associating my name with that of another woman to prejudice people against me and to break our marriage.

"The Mrs. Warren' to whom they have reference was a singer. I do not know where she is now, but I know that she was in Paris. Her name was Mrs. Gertrude Warren, but mine I always signed 'Mrs. Gertrude W. Warren.'"

Young Hamilton says that he refuses to be a sheep and follow the path laid by his mother and father.

"I want freedom in selecting my partner for life," he said. "The Morgans wanted control over the instructions from them. Because I refused they are endeavoring to make things unpleasant for me and my wife."

Admit Girl on Plea of Sweetheart's Wife

By International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 31.—Miss Emily Knowles, acknowledged sweetheart of Perley M. Spiker, an American officer, who was stationed in England during the war, and her baby, will be admitted to America on the strength of the plea of Spiker's wife, the Bureau of Immigration announced this afternoon.

The order admitting Miss Knowles to this country will be temporary and will be in effect from three to six months, it was announced. Officials stated, however, that they were confident that Miss Knowles would be allowed to remain here, for they had been assured that Guy S. Spiker would marry the girl, who was his brother's sweetheart.

The Spiker family will furnish bond for the girl until she has furnished sufficient proof to establish her permanent right to residence here. Officials of the Bureau of Immigration today stated that the plea made by Mrs. Spiker, whose husband was involved with the girl, is responsible for her being allowed to enter. Mrs. Spiker declared the whole affair "an accident of war," and gave very certain evidence as to the character of the young woman.

Spiker promised officials here that he would marry the girl, even before he heard from her, declaring, "I would do anything to help my brother out."

Guy Spiker has since seen the girl and today informed officials here that he would "only be too glad to marry Emily Knowles."

Officials are confident that the entire incident will be closed within a short time by the marriage of Guy Spiker and the English girl.

TO EXPOSE PERIL IN LEAGUE PACT

Prominent Bostonians to Hear Senators Reed and Walsh at American Rally

How five nations would dominate the world, thus producing friction, and probably war if the League of Nations became a fact will be explained at the Tremont Temple next Wednesday evening by United States Senators James A. Reed of Missouri and David I. Walsh of Massachusetts.

The meeting is being conducted by the Boston American in the interest of good government. It will be presided over by Grenville S. MacFarland. The American has consistently opposed the League of Nations, believing that it is an un-American pact.

Several of the leading members of the League for the Preservation of American Independence have accepted invitations to occupy seats on the stage of Tremont Temple when the two Senators speak. They include Louis A. Coolidge, a director of the national organization and president of the Massachusetts branch.

Other members of this organization who have accepted invitations are Herbert W. Parker, vice-president of the Massachusetts branch and former attorney-general of State; Major Carroll J. Swan, secretary, General R. Leroy Sweetser, director of the State branch and head of the State Board of Labor and Industries, and Fred C. Spaulding, executive secretary. It is expected several additional members will accept.

Others who will be there are Mayor Peter F. Sullivan of Worcester, Attorney Michael L. Fahey, Miss Mary Culhane and Mrs. Thomas J. Broderick.

All seats for the meeting in Tremont Temple will be free, with the exception of a few on the platform, which have been reserved for prominent men and women of New England. Everybody is welcome. First come, first served. The doors will open at 7:30, and, as Senators Reed and Walsh are among the best orators in the United States Senate, it will be advisable to arrive early to get seats.

NO CLASSES IN U. S. COOLIDGE DECLARES

Government is paramount to labor, Governor Coolidge said during a speech before the Dartmouth Alumni Association at the Copley-Plaza. "We recognize no classes in America," he said. "There all agreement, all competence, all capitalists to a certain extent, and almost all capitalists are laborers. Any distinction is an artificial one. What we need to keep in mind is that capital and labor and everything else must be represented in the great republic. The government must at all times and under all circumstances represent the public will. The government must be supreme."

U. S. HARDEST HIT BY TAXES

System More Drastic Than European, Declares Secretary Glass

Washington, Jan. 31.—The United States has a more drastic system of taxation than Europe, according to Secretary of the Treasury Glass. The secretary's letter to the United States Chamber of Commerce, protesting against foreign loans, caused much comment, which was enhanced by his supplementary statements today.

The people of the United States, he declared, are harder hit by taxes than those of Europe. All classes of people and all countries were taken into account for comparison, said the Secretary.

In explaining that his letter did not refer specifically to a British loan, but to loans to all allied countries as a group, Nor did the letter discuss the income tax alone, but all taxes.

"Our present system of taxes is bearing a greater burden of direct costs than those of most other countries," he said. "Our taxes hit our people in total much harder than most European peoples are hit. Our taxes hit our people in more ways than is really the case in European countries."

Liddle, charged that she intended to slay him with the revolver found upon her when she was arrested near his place of employment at Metuchen, was indicted here today. The indictment charged the carrying of a concealed weapon.

A plea of non vult was entered by her attorneys, and Judge Dudley at once accepted the plea. He sentenced her to be placed on probation for three years and to leave this section "except in so far as it may be necessary to protect her legal rights." This latter clause was regarded as referring to the necessity of her return to appear as a witness against Liddle when he is tried upon her charge of seduction under promise of marriage.

Miss Johnson, who was born in Indiana, is well educated. She graduated from the High School and Normal School at Vincennes, Ind., later studying psychology at New York University and Columbia.

GIRL, DESERTED, TO PAY BALM

Verdict for Wife of Man Who Deserted One Sweetheart to Wed Another

Providence, Jan. 31.—What is believed to be a legal precedent in heartbalm cases was established here today when a verdict of $1,000 was returned against Miss Prudence Barr for alienation of affections of a man who has since deserted her to marry another woman.

The verdict was in favor of Mrs. Dora Blackstone, until recently the wife of Earl Blackstone, a hotel clerk.

The unique love tangle began before America entered the war. It became complicated on Blackstone's return from service. Mrs. Blackstone charged that his affections were alienated by Miss Barr, a cashier in the hotel where Blackstone served as a clerk.

Miss Barr went to New York and within a few months Mrs. Blackstone had secured a divorce, alleging non-support.

Shortly after his wife won her freedom Blackstone married Miss Laura Vallen, who had succeeded Miss Barr in the cashier's cage.

Manchester, N. H., Jan. 31.—A youth of seventeen, kept in a cell at the Industrial School for eleven days on a scanty diet and with only four ragged coats to sleep on, because there was no other method of disciplins open to the school authorities.

This is what the Governor and Council and trustees of the institution found there on their tour of inspection of the school. A mattress was ordered given to the youth. He was released from the following day without demand from the trustees.

All concerned refuse to say what action, if any, they propose to take in regard to Superintendent Vernot E. Backus, against whom has been directed criticism.

It is reported, however, that some of the young inmates told the visitors that Superintendent Backus had made slighting remarks about Governor Bartlett, referring to him as "that big stiff," and that the food given the inmates was not fit to eat.

Backus is superintendent "at will" of the trustees, never having been officially appointed by the court.

Somesmonths ago the trustees forbade the use of corporal punishment. At that time it was intimated by friends of Superintendent Backus that the governor and trustees were anxious for his removal.

STECKER WINS WORLD'S WRESTLING TITLE FROM CADDOCK

BOUT GOES OVER TWO HOURS

Nebraskan Ends Battle With Body Scissors and Double Wrist Lock

New York, Jan. 31.—The whole country is today lauding Joe Stecker of Nebraska as the heavyweight champion wrestler of the world. Before a record-breaking crowd in Madison Square Garden, the Nebraska farmer regained the title from Earl Caddock of Iowa in a bout to be remembered long by wrestling followers.

The contest lasted 2 hours 5 minutes and 10 seconds. His deadly body-scissors, supplemented by a double wrist-lock, brought victory to the Nebraskan and settled a controversy of many months.

The Garden furnished a perfect setting for the grapple of the giants with its sea of spectators, wildly enthusiastic. It was enhanced by the Army and Navy contingents to the entrance of the gladiators. Middie buglers ushered in Stecker, an ex-navy instructor. Doughboys escorted Caddock, an ex-army sergeant, from overseas.

STECKER NEVER IN DANGER.

The match again revealed that only a superman can cope with the body-scissors. Caddock showed superior skill, speed and a variety of holds that evened up Stecker's advantage of some twenty pounds in weight. Nevertheless, Stecker at no time appeared slow in comparison. Their strength seemed equal.

With so much at stake, both were extremely cautious during the first half hour. Then Stecker started the action. He flopped Caddock with a trip, but Caddock clung to his opponent for the scissors. From that time on Caddock was on the defensive. Several times it seemed that Stecker had his legs clamped perfectly for the scissors, but Caddock either turtled or wrenched clear.

GAINS DECISIVE HOLD.

Once Stecker flung Caddock from his feet to the mat with a crash. For the latter again was too quick for the Nebraskan. A wicked head-lock failed to hold Caddock, who, after the hour and a half mark, showed his best edge on the aggressive. He toppled Stecker with an ankle hold, again with a double-Nelson, and came out of the scissors to tie up Stecker with a double-wrist hold from behind.

At the two-hour mark Caddock held Stecker in a crushing half-Nelson for fully five minutes, but by a mighty effort Stecker lifted and hurled Caddock to the mat. In the wriggling that followed Stecker gained the decisive hold.

TELLING A FRIEND HOW TO BEAT THAT OLD FEAR OF THE DENTIST'S CHAIR

THINKS STECKER BEST EVER

Greater Than Gotch, Declares Dr. Roller, Commenting on Victory Over Caddock

New York, Jan. 31.—"Joe Stecker is the greatest wrestler this country ever produced. His match last night with Earl Caddock was the greatest I have ever seen. It was an honest match and the best man won," says Dr. F. F. Roller, who a few years ago ranked as one of the leading heavyweight grapplers.

"Stecker is greater than Frank Gotch," continued Roller. "It will be a long time before this country will find another wrestler who will be able to take Stecker's title away from him."

Although according Stecker highest praise Roller does not belittle Caddock. He asserted that Stecker's twenty-pound advantage in weight and his greater strength were the chief factors that enabled him to win over Caddock.

THE FACE ON THE DRUG STORE FLOOR

EVERY small town had a saloon on one corner and a drug store on the other.

AND the booze habit seems to have simply moved to the other corner.

THE old gluepot perched on the busiest angle of the works. That is, it was busiest up until July, 1919, when the camel grabbed the lion's place as the king of beasts. Across the main stem, catacornered, was the village drug store, with its red and green illuminated vases twiddling soupishly. Everything is catacornered to a souse. He knows that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. But his feet don't know it.

JUST a minute, stranger, a stone is in my shoe. Do you remember how the village hokies used to shovel off the tavern walk after a snowfall in the old days? Their reward was a couple of shocks of hootch. We piped an old bum shoveling off a saloon sidewalk yesterday. His reward will be in Heaven.

WHEN the snow flies in the gloaming now all the boys grab their blizzard scoops and wheel down to the drug store. They know where the magic powders are. Any druggist can peddle likker for medicinal purposes and there ain't any law agin taking medicine.

It was a balmy Summer's evening and a goodly crowd was there, that well nigh filled Joe's drug store on the corner of the square.

"Ten Drug Stores in One Night" is the new powerful drama that is knocking 'em off their seats.

WELL, you've got to toss the drug stores credit for one thing. They give you a red and green light to steer by. Hold a straight course between the starboard and larboard lights, captain, for danger lies straight ahead. Lead us to it.

IT used to cost the old-time barkeep anywhere from a grand to fifteen hundred buttons for a license. Now the druggists kick in with twenty-five seeds Federal tax and ten smackers State tax. Showing that we are going back to the old days of low license. The saloon merchant had to oil the ward heelers and grease the cops on the beat. But you never saw a harness bull-pike into the family entrance of a drug bazaar, did you? Best he'd grab would be a handful of quinine marbles.

Say, give me a drink; that's what I want; I'm out of funds, you know. When I had cash to treat the gang this hand was never slow.

FIGURING on the price of a drug store spree, one pint entitles you to a gallon headache. The apothecary swats you five bills a pint and gives you a jitney for bringing the bottle back. That's better than the saloon guys, who would never trust you with the bottle.

And then I met a woman, now comes the funny part, with eyes that petrified my brain and sunk into my heart.

WHEN papa gets lumbago in the nose or rheumatism in the ears the rest of the family throw Indian dice to see who hops down to the drug store to get the prescription filled. Never was like that in the old days when they didn't care whether he got his medicine or not, provided his insurance was paid up.

And ere a year of misery had passed above my head the jewel I had treasured so had tarnished and was dead.

THEY never used to go after pop's medicine and he never got it. Now they go after it and he never gets it. A doctor's prescription is good for a ringside seat at the drug store cabaret. Funny sight to pipe a sign on the old pill dispensary chirping that no ladies will be admitted without escort.

What, what's the matter, friend? There's a tear-drop in your eye. Come laugh with me, 'tis only babes and women that should cry.

TEN years ago the old man always used to get sick the day after a souse. Now he has to get sick the day before it.

COUNTERFEITERS have stopped making million dollar bills and are forging doctor's certificates entitling the winner to one pint of the best. That "R" that tops every prescription must be the Latin for Rummy. Sonny, run down to the drug store and get me a hot water bag filled with Hair & Hair. If they haven't got that, get me a tube of Kentucky tooth paste.

Give me that piece of chalk with which you mark the baseball score; you shall see the lovely Madeline upon the drug store floor.

THE old drug store used to be the terminus of the old-time jag. Now it's both ends. It's only a short stagger from the booze to the bromo seltzer department. Don't forget to reserve your table in the corner drug palace for the next New Year's Eve.

Then as he placed another lock upon that shapely head, with a fearful shriek he leaped and fell across the picture dead.

Having opened with a victory over Yale, the Harvard varsity hockey sextet will endeavor to duplicate that performances in the initial 1920 meeting with Princeton at the ice Pavilion tonight.

The Crimson is a strong favorite in this contest, and judging Princeton from its play during the Christmas recess, there seems every logical reason to expect a Harvard victory. Word from Tigertown has it that the Nassau men have become a vastly improved organization since they last visited Boston, and they come confident of making the Crimson travel to the limit.

Ned Bigelow, the big noise in the Crimson forward line, who was injured in the recent Harvard-Dartmouth game, will be back in the Harvard lineup tonight.

B. C. HIGH TRACK TEAM WINS

English Beaten by Ten-Point Margin in Meet at the East Armory

Boston College won a 44½ to 32½ victory over the English High track team at the East Armory. The lack of a good 1,000-yard man and the omission of the hurdles, in which English High is especially strong, was a big factor in the defeat for English. B. C. High took the four places in the 1,000-yard run with Kelley, Chisholm, Healey and Carr finishing in order.

The sixty-yard dash was decidedly in favor of English, which took 11 points; Al De Witt and Peter Day of English had a close race, with the former nosing into a win. Francis Rooney of B. C. High ran a good thousand, winning from Harold Morgan of English. English High put up a better fight than was expected, showing that when Johnny Foster gets back into form in the 330 and a 1,000-yard man is developed the Montgomery street school will be a tough one to beat.

PAL REID OUT TO KAYO ROBINSON

Latter Relies on Speed and Skill to Keep Him Out of Danger

By JACK CONWAY.

Pal Reid is out to kayo George Robinson in their twelve-round bout at the Commonwealth A. A. tonight. He wants to convince Boston boxing fans that he is the only logical opponent for Mike O'Dowd.

Reid already has one victory to his credit over Robinson. He gave the dope an upset when he won a decision over the Cambridge middleweight at Framingham last November. Among other things, Pal dropped Robinson for the count of nine in the first round.

There are few middleweights who can hit as hard as Reid, who boxes with his right hand extended and relies upon a left-hand wallop. He has been dodged by all of the local 158-pounders with the exception of Robinson.

Robinson believes his skill will enable him to get the award this p. m. He intends to keep forcing the fouse at all times so as to make it difficult for Reid to let drive with one of his winning smashes.

At the Armory Club the other night Robinson showed plenty of ability against Joe Eagan. He believes he will perform even better tonight in which event he will have no trouble grabbing the award of Referee Phil Power.

Jack Noyes of the South End will have Battling Thomas of Chicago as an opponent in the semi-final of eight rounds. There will also be a couple of sixes.

MANY BOXERS READY TO MEET YOUNG BLADES

If Young Blades of Woonsocket is sincere in his statement that he wants ring bouts, Freddy Yelle of Taunton is prepared to accommodate him. The same holds true for Frankie Brill, Johnny Downes and Harry Carlson, Yelle has engaged in eight bouts during the past four months and has not been defeated. Four of his victories have been by knockouts. Alex McLean of Maynard is post a substantial forfeit to bind a match between Yelle and any of the boxers mentioned above.

CHAKAS' MANAGER SEEKS BOUT WITH ELMS

The decision which Tommy Elms received over Young Chakas at Manchester, N. H., failed to please Alex McLean, Chakas' manager, or the fans of the Granite State city. They were of the opinion that Chakas won. McLean today posted $100 with the American, which he is willing to let go as a side bet that Chakas can conquer Elms. The Manchester club is prepared to put on the match in two weeks. The next move is up to Elms.

JOHNNY GIBLIN TO BOX K. O. JOE LEONARD

Johnny Giblin of Roxbury, former New England 125-pound champion, has been signed to meet K. O. Joe Leonard of Roxbury in the semi-final of eight rounds at the Suffolk A. A.'s show next Monday night.

The final of twelve frames, which will be between Eddie Shevlin and George Alger, has aroused considerable interest. When these boxers met recently, Alger won on a foul. Shevlin is now out to land a victory.

JOHNNY ALECKS HOLDS NELSON IN 12 ROUNDS

Brockton, Jan. 31.—Johnny Alecks of Philadelphia and Hat Nelson of Brooklyn boxed twelve rounds to a draw at the Brockton A. C. Jim Frizzetti of Bridgewater won over Dan McCormack of East Boston when the referee stopped the bout in the fourth round. Mickey Donovan of Brockton knocked out Wallie Cole of Brockton in two rounds, and Frankie Sheehan of Brockton defeated Young Wolgast of Malden in six rounds.

John Lester Johnson is not worrying about Fred Fulton's left. He says that when he clashes with the Minneapolis giant at the Armory A. A.'s show at Mechanics Building next Tuesday night that he will keep at close quarters where Fulton's left will be virtually useless. Johnson is a stiff body puncher, and every that his blows to the midriff will wear down his opponent.

YOUNG FITZSIMMONS IN DRAW WITH BRYANT

Hot Springs, Ark., Jan. 31.—Otis Bryant, of Milwaukee and Young Fitzsimmons, of Oklahoma City, boxed ten fast rounds to a draw. It was the second meeting of the pair.

Atlas' Record.

George Arliss, "Jacques Duval," occupies a field quite alone among the character actors of the English-speaking stage. For seventeen years he has been appearing in America, and the portrait gallery of his creations is an interesting one. He sprang into prominence first through his extraordinary portrayal of the dissolute Marquis de Steyne in Mrs. Fiske's production of "Becky Sharp." Critics and the public as well recognized the work of a great artist. He had come here first as leading man to Mrs. Patrick Campbell in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." David Belasco, attracted by his artistry, had engaged him for the role of Zaroki in "The Darling of the Gods," a character which he played with the sure poise and polish with which he endows all of his creations.

Then he went a-starring under the direction of Harrison Grey Fiske in Molnar's singularly weird play, "The Devil." This eerie creation was followed by the gentle "Septimus," dramatized from Locke's fascinating novel. Under George C. Tyler's direction he created the role of Disraeli in the play of that name and played the character an entire year in New York. Later came "Paganini," "The Professor's Love Story" and "Hamilton," the latter a play of which he was part author.

Suits John and Mary

Those two nice people, John Craig and Mary Young, have come back to Boston and resumed business at their old stand, the Arlington—ex Castle. No actors since the days of William Warren and the Boston Museum stock company have ever enjoyed such a large personal following in this city and their success is all the more remarkable that the trend of the modern theatre is away from the stock company.

In "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer" the Craigs have a valuable play property, if saw the trial performance given last Fall and said then that the title role was one of the best offered to an actress who fools with the emotions for some years. The company assembled to put it on this time is as good as can be found in any Broadway production. Let's hope it runs as long as "Common Clay." Between you and me it is a much better play than that popular success.

Look Who's Here.

Mr. Ed Wynn, inspired by the success of Raymond Hitchcock with his various "Hitchy-Koo" entertainments, is out on his own with a carnival or musical revue which he fondly hopes will be merely a five edition. Wynn has been seen before in various Ziegfeld Follies, Winter Gardens, etc., and comes of theatrical parents. He had luxurious backgrounds of girls. Since his last visit he has become a favorite with New York through the means of hits in musical comedies and lawsuits with different theatrical moguls.

His specialty is confidential stuff, fondle about his personality and apparently indiscreet revelations.

Mary Garden's Rival Foiled.

Cecil Cunningham, who is one of the stars of the "Rose of China," which opened the Shubert Monday, was once a member of the Boston Opera Company, though she never sang in Boston.

You remember that the Boston Opera, at the end of the season of 1914, decided to give ten weeks of opera in Paris at the Theatre Champs Elysee. Miss Cunningham, who had been playing around the country in "The Pink Lady," was bound for London for a tour of the music halls on the same steamer. Henry Russell heard her sing, and immediately hired her for the opera. But she was to Paris accepted about one-tenth her regular salary and settled down to put the Garden out of business. But the war came along and ruined her operatic career. The poor girl was thus stranded, and Cecil was glad to get back and take a job in the Winter Garden, where she has since been in vaudeville and musical comedy.

Megrue's Miracle.

There are five people in the cast of "Tea for Three," but only three of them have important roles. Roi Megrue performed a technical miracle in making a play out of three characters, as anybody who knows the stage will cheerfully attest.

"How do you kill time?" demanded a friend of mine when he heard that the three people and a tray of tea things supplied all the action in the play. "It must be dreadfully talky."

It is to be sure, but conversation is the most interesting thing in the world if it is an expression of ideas by clever people.

The French understand this much better than we do. Two or three French people can have a most exciting evening sitting at a table discussing everything under the sun. French plays depend far more upon conversation and less upon action than ours. When a great French success is imported the first thing the American producer must do is to make things happen in the play which in France the characters merely discussed.

Thus when "Hanbi" was brought to America it made its success upon a gorgeous ballroom scene, and a circular staircase scene. But the original times incidents did not occur at all. They were described by one of the actors as he was packing a trunk.

Can't Stand On Her Head.

Dorothy Maynard the versatile prima donna of "She's a Good Fellow" can't stand on her head. She has tried hundreds of times, and she can manage all right when practising on a bed, but on the stage she's a fly, and she admits it.

In that "Teacher, Teacher" number with Scotty Welch, the stage director thought it would be a fine idea of Dorothy would introduce standing on her head as a bit of business.

"I'm a singer, not an acrobat," she declared.

"Well, it will put your song over," said the stage manager, "and you just try it." Dorothy tried it again and again but for some reason or other she always fell over sideways instead of somersaulting gracefully. The stunt was reluctantly abandoned. Yet the song goes over without it, as the thunderclap of applause which I head at its conclusion on the opening night will attest.

That Chicago Visitation.

That outfit from Chicago which will warble in the Boston Opera House for the first week in March contains the greatest collection of operatic drawing cards since the old days of Hammerstein. At the Metropolitan Opera this year they have only Caruso, Geraldine Farrar and our old friend Evelyn Scotney to start any connection with the box office if they headed this way.

Listen to the line-up from the windy metropolis: Galli-Curci, Mary Garden, Yvonne Gall, Titta Ruffo, George Hadnott and some Ken whose eyebrows lady friend Almasar is now telling stories about; Bonci, Hammerstein's once-married star, John O'Sullivan, the only Irish tenor now in grand opera; Edward Johnson, the new American tenor who is said to be a sensation; Carlo Galeffi, the Italian baritone; Minna de Japanese prima donna, and Raisa, the great Hebrew soprano.

And the repertoire offered in two weeks is something astounding: fourteen different operas and no repetition. Some of the names we have never heard in Boston because we have been out of the operatic world for so long. They include "Heure Espanole," by Ravel; "Mme Chrysantheme," by Messager; "Aphrodite," "Hip Van Winkle," by the late Reginald De Koven, and a lot of revivals that are practically strangers to us.

Uproar En Route.

Oh, joy! Stransky has put upon his program for the New York Philharmonic Concert in Boston, February 7, the "Overture, 1812," by Tschaikowsky. This is positively the noisiest piece of music ever conceived by man. If you don't know what a rocket can be kicked up by a Symphony Orchestra of 100, hear the "1812 Overture" and find out. That finale, with its booming cannon, ringing bells, bursting bombs, crashing cymbals and shrieking fifes and bellowing brasses, stands alone.

Stransky while a Pops Orchestra has put it on to the edification of Summer folks, but to hear it in a Symphony Orchestra program lots of people would walk miles.

Glues on His Monocle.

The mystery of Kenneth Douglas' monocle is solved. Douglas, who is now entertaining us at the Wilbur Theatre with his splendid acting in "Too Many Husbands," is the champion long-distance monocle wearer of Piccadilly. There is scarcely no time while Mr. Douglas cannot perform with his monocle still fast in his eye, and with no visible support. He has actually gone to sleep with it on and still retain it.

The trick whereby he accomplished this tenacity of his monocle was never discovered by any of his envious colleagues. But now the secret is out. A newspaper man, who dropped into Mr. Douglas' dressing room at the Wilbur one night this week, discovered him sticking it on with the aid of glue, so it is said.

Mr. Douglas was as embarrassed as a schoolgirl might have been in a more serious situation, and protested that he was using glue only because the grease paint on his face made the surface slippery. So there's another great illusion of the stage smashed to smithereens.

Life in Somerville.

Clyde McArdle is rapidly building up a powerful stock organization in Somerville. Malcolm Fassett, his new leading man, is a well known and popular actor. Folks says that E. H. Crosby, the critic, will have a new play ready for Mr. McArdle pretty soon. He has already produced two Crosby dramas.

KEITH'S

The eminent comedian, Leon Errol, heads the bill at Keith's Theatre next week. For several seasons he was the star of the Follies. Then comes Rose Coghlan, who plays the part of Stephanie de Mohrivart in "Forget Me Not," a character that is a delight in its perfection of exalted womanhood and which is made vital through the brilliant acting of Miss Coghlan. She is supported by Albert Andrianotto Salerno and Ethel Wright.

Ina Ricsnor Ball and her brother, Joseph, who have achieved fame in the concert world as violinist and cellist respectively, will be seen in an act they call "Moments Musical."

SHUBERT THEATRE

With a reputation for producing dainty and exquisite musical offerings, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest are reported to have surpassed themselves in "The Rose of China," a gorgeous production of rare Oriental beauty, which comes to the Shubert for a limited engagement beginning Monday night. Reviving memories of the days of "San Toy" and "The Geisha," this musical romance is said to be one which will please the artocrats, through the high and melodious quality of its score, as well as the entertaining features of its presentation. Guy Bolton tells a breezy story of the land beyond the broad expanse of the Pacific, where Ling Tao, the tiny Chinese heroine, is kissed by the wrong man, and according to this same tradition should marry him. There are eighteen musical numbers by Armand Vecsey which possess the lilting and melodious qualities that send the audiences away humming. The comedy, in the hands of Frank McIntyre and Cecil Cunningham, two Boston favorites, is described as droll and at all times refreshing. They have been provided by P. G. Wodehouse with some of the best lyrics this well known writer for the stage has yet turned out. Oscar Shaw and James Richardson, in equally important roles, are said to add much to the enjoyment of the performance.

ARLINGTON THEATRE

John Craig's Spring season at the Arlington Theatre will begin on Monday night with a special performance of "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer," a brilliant and powerful play by Harry Gribble, with Mary Young at the head of the strongest company ever assembled at the Arlington. In support of Miss Young, who will play the title role, will be seen Minna Gale Haines, Eugenie Blair, Charles Bickford, Rupert Lumley, Cora Witherspoon, Miriam Doyle, Kevin Macauley Rose, Bert Pennington, Betty Barnicoat, Marjorie Dalton, Jessie Arnold and Oscar Greg Bridge. Mr. Craig himself will take one of the principal parts while the play is at the Arlington. "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer" is a vivid and deeply emotional study of a famous stage star who permits a scandalous story concerning her past life to separate her son, whom she loves jealously, from his fiancee.

GAYETY THEATRE

Joe Hurtig, whose name as a producer of the best burlesque is recognized wherever burlesque is known, will be represented at the Gayety Theatre next week by The Bowery Burlesquers, an organization already well known by name but one which appears this season in a show that is brand new in every respect and which is being accepted everywhere as one of Hurtig's best endeavors in show production. Novelty pervades the production in every department from the book to the scenic and costume investiture. The former was written by Loney Haskell.

HOLLIS ST. THEATRE

Beginning Monday evening next, Mr. George Arliss and company will open at the Hollis Street Theatre in "Jacques Duval." Matinees will be played on Wednesday and Saturdays. Its chief incident of the drama concerns a medical scientist who has spent years of experimentation on a serum to cure tuberculosis. On the eve of proclaiming his great discovery to the world he learns that his wife, a butterfly creature who has sought diversion from his austerity, is unfaithful to him. Her lover is a victim of the white plague. Without apparently relaxing his efforts in behalf of science, he seeks to effect a cure of the lover, with the intent of making him well because it is contrary to the ethics of his profession to kill a sick man.

The production of "Jacques Duval" has been made with great care and the cast includes Mr. Arliss and Mina Bisdon, a beautiful young English actress who has been in this country for only a few seasons.

WALDRON'S CASINO

The Great Star and Garter Show, produced by the W. & W. Amusement Company, Inc., comes to Waldron's Casino on Monday. In days gone by burlesque meant almost an exclusive male audience, but things have changed with the times, and now women constitute a large part of the patrons of this form of amusement. Sir M. Weingarden, producer of the Great Star and Garter Show, was one of the first to take advantage of later-day conditions and has spared no expense to give the public the best that money can secure. The production is said to be superb in every way, and the cast is called "De Luxe." Chief among the players are Florence Darley, a dainty blonde prime donna.

SOMERVILLE THEATRE

"Lombardi, Ltd.," is the attraction to be presented at the Somerville Theatre the coming week, and Manager McArdle has scored a distinct triumph by obtaining the right to produce this play before it has enjoyed its full run of popularity on the legitimate stage. Leo Carrillo, the foremost character actor of the day, created the role of Tito Lombardi.

TREMONT THEATRE

The Ed Wynn Carnival (first edition), an up-to-date musical revue, with book and songs by Ed Wynn, will be presented at the Tremont Theatre next Monday night.

This latest addition to the musical comedy stage is announced as a lively and jazz entertainment, spotted with clever specialties, genuine humor and many novel situations.

With commendable good taste, Mr. Wynn has elected to imperil the brilliance of his own radiance in the stellar role by surrounding himself with notably gifted players. Edna Whistler, a beautiful woman with a splendid soprano voice, the prima donna; Lillian Fitzgerald, clever singer, mimic and satirist, has an important role in the revue, as has Sidney Phillips, operatic tenor; Ray Miller and his Melody Boys, instrumentalists, singers and dancers; the Meyakos, clever little Japanese girls, and J. Harry Jenkins are included in the company.

The piece is in a prologue, two acts and twelve scenes.

MALDEN AUDITORIUM

"Happiness" is the attraction announced for the coming week at the popular Malden Auditorium, and it is safe to say that it will receive a flattering interpretation in the hands of the Temple Stock Players. "Happiness" served as a most successful starring vehicle for Laurette Taylor and during its Boston engagement scored a distinct success, as well as adding laurels to its author, J. Hartley Manners. It is a story of love and, as the name would suggest, happiness. Miss Adelyn Bushnell will assume the role of the shop girl.

"THE ROYAL VAGABOND"

Cohan & Harris will present their surpassing musical comedy success, "The Royal Vagabond," fresh from its triumphant run of an entire year in New York, with an engagement at the Colonial Theatre Monday night, February 16.

HARRY LAUDER

A week of laughter and melody is assured for the patrons of the Boston Opera House beginning next Monday, February 9. Harry Lauder, the ever-versatile Scotch minstrel, who comes back with new successes crowded to him by a notable tour of Australia, and with the title of "Sir Harry" as a recognition of his services in the great war, is singing a number of characteristic new songs this season, but he is also reviving some of the most popular of the old favorites, and this in itself will be welcome news to the thousands of theatregoers.

STRUCK IT RICH

Few young actresses reach an important role on Broadway within two years of graduation from college—indeed few young actresses ever go to college at all—but that's the record of Miss Marie Goff, of the Owen Davis melodrama of murder and mystery, "44 9-45," now at the Tremont Theatre.

Miss Goff struck Broadway after a brief season with the Alcazar Stock Company in her native city of San Francisco, and a short period with a road company, and right off the reel was allotted one of the leading parts in "The Thirteenth Chair," another play of mystery which enjoyed a big success.

The same delightful personality and real ability might won her the place in this production drew her to the attention of William A. Brady, who, as a veteran producer, saw the possibilities of the young woman's talents and lost no time in presenting her with a contract which would make many an experienced actress envious.

Naturally Miss Goff signed the contract. She was promptly cast for the leading feminine role of "44 9-45."

The part of a society belle came very naturally to Miss Goff, for she played the role in real life out in San Francisco, where, during her student days in the University of California, she was a universal favorite.

"39 EAST"—WILBUR

The attraction at the Wilbur Theatre, beginning Monday evening, February 16, will be Rachel Crothers' brilliant comedy, "39 East," with Henry Hull and Constance Binney in the leading roles, and the original New York company without a single exception.

"BAD"

Beginning Monday, February 16, at the Hollis Street Theatre, George C. Tyler will present "Bab," the dramatization of the stories by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which in book form are most popular reading. The central character, that of the "subdeb," which term is fitted to the young women too young to enter society and too old for a child, will be played by Helen Hayes, a young actress who in her last two stage impersonations has quite captured the affection of New York theatregoers.

BALKIN LECTURE

If the Democratic candidate has a square-shaped head, and the Republican candidate's head is round, which one should you vote for?

This and various other questions of a similar nature are to be answered and the reasons for the answers given by Harry H. Balkin, character analyst and employers' adviser, at a lecture in Steinert Hall next Wednesday evening. For the past eight year Mr. Balkin has devoted himself to research work along the lines of analyzing character.

McISAAC says that

"TEA FOR THREE" at the Park Square is an especially amusing drawing room comedy with three clever people, Laura Hope Crews, Fred Perry and Arthur Byron.

"AT 9:45," is a snappy melodrama full of detectives, clues and suspects. It is pretty well played and guaranteed to thrill. Plymouth.

"TOO MANY HUSBANDS" at the Wilbur is a cheerful if absurd farce well played by English folk. Last fortnight.

"SHE'S A GOOD FELLOW" at the Colonial is a Jerome Kern musical comedy of uneven excellence, but the people like it.

"THE UNKNOWN PURPLE" concludes a long engagement here at the Majestic next week. An unusual and interesting melodrama.

BOY ACTOR FOR OUR MARY

"Leading juvenile" about whom much is heard in theatrical circles, but who seldom shows up when the production comes to town, is a reality in "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's latest screen success, being personally presented at Tremont Temple, twice daily by Nathan H. Gordon.

For Miss Pickford's leading "man" is in reality a juvenile, the sum of his Summers and Winters amounting to fifteen. Young as Howard Ralston, the leading juvenile in question, may be in years, he is old in theatrical experience, for he has been on the stage since he was two years old.

Prefers to Take Tips.

Those who despise the doctrines of the modern doctors of physiognomy and believe with Othello that "there's no art to read the mind's construction in the face," have another example to quote in the person of N. Schroell, who plays "Abraham Lincoln" with Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," now at the Park Theatre.

Schroell, according to competent judges, is the exact image of the great emancipator, not only facially, but in stature and build. Yet Lincoln possessed qualities which enabled him to become one of the greatest executives in all history; while N. Schroell is quite content to remain a waiter in a Broadway cabaret palace.

Although his striking—one might almost say, uncanny—resemblance to the martyred President, has enabled him on several occasions to earn princely salaries in stage productions, he has never failed as soon as possible to forsake the realm of mimicry for that of the well-warmed platter.

Celina Sued

Holworthy Hall and Hugh Kahler recently wrote screamingly funny story about Phobibition called "The Six Best Cellars." It proved so popular that it was brought out in book form. Now it has reached the movies and, with Bryant Washburn as the star, th picture will be shown this week at the Modern and Beacon. Mr. Washburn plays the role of a leading member of a fashionable social set of young married people. To keep in the swim he is pretending to possess a big private stock of choice drinkables. On the eve of a big dinner which he is giving, he unexpectedly locates several cases of wet in bottles at the home of a Prohibition aunt. At the crucial moment as the party he is horrified to discover that the bottles are empty. He saves his face by launching into a fierce diatribe against drinking for drinking's sake, which leads him into complications too rich to tell about here.

Wanda Hawley is the leading woman in this funny Paramount-Artcraft comedy. It was directed by Donald Crisp.

Doug's New Deluxe.

"When the Clouds Roll By," to be shown next week at Gordon's Olympia, is the most elaborate, costly and stupendous picture Douglas Fairbanks has ever made.

When Doug began his picture, immediately after he had finished his first United Artists release, "His Majesty, the American," he called a conference of all the technical staff at his studio in Hollywood, California, and told them his idea for the next story. Every one was astonished. "Doug" was absolutely determined that it should be the most startling, daring, and with that he insisted that everything from beginning to end had to be of the most elaborate order.

He went so far as to insist in his story that an entire city, such as may be found through the Middle Western section of the United States, be destroyed in providing one of the spectacular punches in the production. And the destruction was not to be of the usual description. It had to be a flood. The proposition seemed utterly impossible, but to "Doug" there has never been anything that he can't do when he wants to. And so it was done.

Allen Dwan's Career.

Looming well to the front among the folk who are celebrating for their achievements in the production of successful films, Allan Dwan has clutched to himself a considerable credit in "Soldiers of Fortune," adapting it from the book by Richard Harding Davis.

Allan Dwan was born in Toronto, Canada, but as a boy moved to Chicago, where he went to the local public schools. He then attended Notre Dame, specializing in mechanical engineering and then literature.

Leaving college he pursued the profession of engineering, and although until he found the attractions of the motion picture industry too strong to resist, he was always an interested in literature, and the story of the latter's growth was mighty weak ten years ago!

This was before the day of feature productions and Mr. Dwan obtained his early training as screen writer and director while "Bison" films travelled their single-reel road to a weekly booking public. He next directed and wrote scenarios for a number of affiliating with the American Film Company, and remaining with them three years.

Bistory Stuff

"Why all these quills?" asked George Walsh, pointing over the starboard bow of the ship chartered for the making of "Sin Flood" to a row of quills that seem to be fitted to the gunwales in the manner of a porcupine.

"Ah reckon it am bluefish," smoke up the ship's cook, who happened to overhear Walsh's query. "De bluefish eats de little fish and dar am lots of dem, bits of fish, but de scale eat while de big fish am feed', Dat's why fishermen always cast dat net. Dar day see de quills a flyin'. Time was when dis yeah bay was full o' fish an' quills, but de oil tankers, phosphate boats an' tramps goin' through it skeers de fish away." — No wonder you couldn't catch any fish for 'Lassie,' George," said the director as he tossed a bit of meat from the sandwich in his hand to the dog who plays an important role in the great photodrama, "The Shark."

April Folly

By Cynthia Stockley

A Brilliant New Film Romance With Marion Davies

Watch for This Story in Motion Pictures

"April Folly," soon to be seen in leading motion picture theatres, is a Cosmopolitan production, released through Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount-Artcraft picture, direction of Robert Z. Leonard.

The Story to Date

Lady Diana Sandilands, bound for South Africa, manages to lose her chaperone before the train leaves London and, meeting a charming but poor girl, April Poole, in the railway carriage, persuades her to exchange identities with her for the period of the voyage only. They go on board and April finds the adventure delightful.

APRIL, lying in her deck-chair, thought she had come to fairyland. Escorted upstairs by the doctor and a retinue of stewardesses, she was installed in a sheltered corner that commanded the whole brilliant scene.

The purser found her the most comfortable of chairs; the first officer brought her a bamboo table from his cabin for her books, the captain stayed awhile from his duties to congratulate her on her recovery and several men loitered near at hand, casting reverently admiring glances. But she had eyes for nothing save the vivid scene before her. She could not think why so many passengers were scurrying to and fro, anxious to be taken ashore. It seemed as foolish as to try to get into a picture instead of sitting before it.

Everyone was wearing light clothes, for Summer had come at full bound, and soon they would be in the tropics. There were beautifully cut white-linen suits, smart skirts, and flimsy blouses. A popular saying on the Cape mail-boats is that passengers to South Africa are all clothes and no money, while passengers returning are all money and no clothes.

April did not know this epigram, or the truth of it; but she could plainly perceive that, in the scanty kit of April Poole, she would have been very much out of the running among this smart and jaunty crowd.

A Pretty Sight

As it was, clad in a sleek silken muslin of lovely lines, snowy shoes and stockings, and a rose-laden hat, she could hold her own with anyone. A longing filled her to see Diana Sandilands. She wanted to talk to her, exchange confidences, thank her, bless her, and, above all, to find out what it was she found so attractive in the other side of the game. What on earth could it be that was so much more ravishing than to be at peace with the world, respected by it, liked by it, and yet independent of it?

To wear lovely clothes in which you would adopt the knowledge of looking charming without meeting suspicion in the eyes of women and the "good-night glance" in the eyes of men. This last constituted indeed that "subtle reason" at which she had hinted to Diana. Life had hurried April too much for her few years. Obliged to travel its highway alone and unprotected, some of the adventures encountered there had cut her to the quick. While women looked askance at her, men looked too hard and too long. Doubtless she had met the wrong kind. Lonely young girls without money or connections do not always find the knightly and chivalrous gentlemen of their dreams.

She was still, like Omar, wondering "what the winters buy one-half so precious as the stuff they sell" —lost in cogitations about Diana, when the subject of her thoughts, accompanied by three men, came down a companionway from an upper deck. They were evidently set for the shore and making their way to the ship's side, as if certain that the best place in the best boats were reserved for them.

And as For Diana

Diana's appearance betrayed the lack of a maid. Her dress was crumpled; her shoes were badly laced, and her hat was cocked carelessly upon her head. But the subtle Italian hand of the ship's coiffeur had touched her hair, saving the situation. Also, there was a sparkle in her eye and a joie de vivre in her laughter that made up for many deficiencies.

Her companions appeared to have been picked for their good looks. One, with whom she palpably stood on the happiest of terms, was, in fact, strikingly handsome. The other two, hitherto in her estimation content if she tossed them a word over her shoulder from time to time. They all behaved as if they had bought the ship and found the presence of the rest of the passengers an impertinence.

Such of the latter as were still on board returned the compliment according to sex and the ability that were theirs. The men plainly admired Diana's nerve while wondering with their eyebrows what on earth she could see in those three footling fellows. The women looked pityingly at the men, and with their noses indicated that Diana was some kind of dangerous and unpleasant animal escaped from a menagerie.

A lady who had seated herself by April in a chair labeled "Major Earle," curled her lip at the passing group in a manner painfully familiar to her neighbor. Presently, when they were left alone, the rest of the world having disappeared down the ship's side, she addressed April, but with a very different expression on her face.

"You are Lady Diana Sandilands, I think," she said, smiling in a friendly manner. "I am Mrs. Stanislaw. So glad to see you up."

On the Alert

April was instantly on the alert. Not only did she know the name of Mrs. Lionel Stanislaw, but had very good cause to remember it as that of the lady with whom she was to have shared a cabin. The smiling face had once been a very pretty one, but the tide of youth was fast receding, leaving uncovered a bleak and barren shore, whose chief salients were a disdainful nose and mouth which looked as if it might be able to say bitter things. The eyes, however, were still handsome, if supercilious, and her manner velvety.

No doubt there were claws beneath, the velvet, but they were not for April—only for the girl who was using April's name. They had not talked for five minutes before she realized that in this woman Diana had an enemy. Not that Mrs. Stanislaw's words were censorious. She was too clever for that. Her remarks were merely deprecative and full of pity.

"A most amusing creature," she said gently, "but rather disturbing to live with. I confess I wish I had been cribbed and confined with some one who had more conventional manners and kept earlier hours."

Here was something for April to ponder.

"She is very young," she faltered at length, and was unwise enough to add, "and pretty."

Heinous Offences

Those two being heinous offences in the eyes of Mrs. Stanislaw, she proceeded at once to hang, draw and quarter the criminal. But her voice was tenderer than before.

"Yes; isn't it a pity? And so foolishly indiscreet. Do you know they tell me that she is spoken of by all the men on the ship as the 'April fool,' a parody on her name, which is April Poole." Pleasant hearing for her listener who flushed scarlet. "Can you imagine any one who has a liking to earn being so unwise? I find it difficult to believe she is going to the Cape to teach some one's children. I only hope that the story of her indiscretions will not precede her, poor girl!"

April was dumb. Mrs. Stanislaw came to the conclusion that she was dull and rather lacking in feminine sweetness, and after a while went away to bargain with a native for some embroideries. She would have been delighted to know what a poisoned barb she had implanted and left quivering in the side of the so-called Lady Diana.

Beneath the folded V of filmy lace on April's bosom her heart was beating passionately, and the rose-wreathed hat fortunately dropped enough to hide the tears of mortification that filled her eyes. Her name to be parodied and bandied about the ship on men's lips! A poor thing—but her own!

Once that, for all her ups and downs, she had striven and contrived to keep untarnished. How dared Diana Sandilands do this thing to her? What foolishness had she herself been guilty of to put it in another's power to thus injure her?

To Be Continued Monday.

When a Girl Marries

By Ann Lisle

AS I rushed down the path to the river, I couldn't hear a sound except the slap-slap of water against the boat landing. When I came at last to the water's level, there stood Tom Mason, staring at the bend of the river where an upturned canoe was just floating into sight.

He turned to me with a quiet that seemed to belie the mad words he had uttered a moment before, and said:

"The water starts sucking things down just below here. You'd see the canoe pulled down into the whirlpool in a second if I don't go after it and paddle upstream to find the woman who screamed."

He was flinging off coat and shoes as he spoke, and in another moment he would have plunged into the current, but a shout stopped him. Close to the bank, tacking across stream to avoid the treacherous currents, a man supporting a woman swam toward us. Tom seemed to understand the shouts or the plan and ran at once to the boat landing. The sun was in my eyes, and for a second I wasn't able to make out the figures.

A Quieting Effect

Neal was quiet and solemn now. Actually, he seemed terrified as he strolled along back of us with Evvy clinging to him. I wanted to help him and to tell him that everything was all right, but the pathetic Evvy held the centre of the stage and I couldn't oust her from it.

To Tom I said nothing. I couldn't. We hurried up to the house breathlessly and gave our orders. Then I sat waiting for a moment along with Neal. I got it after Tom had tucked him into hot blankets where he lay looking like a solemn young water spaniel.

"Have you seen her? Is she all right, Babbs?" he asked in a tone that had peculiar wearisome in it.

"I was waiting outside your door to see if you were all right, lad," I explained. "Mrs. Cosby's with Evvy, and Jim too—I think."

"Oh, I'm all right," retorted Neal impatiently, waving himself aside with a vague gesture. "It's Evvy who counts—poor little Evvy. It was all my fault, Babbs. If she'd died, I'd have killed her. I—I—we were talking and I hurt her, upset her sort of and she started to get her handkerchief or something, and then all of a sudden we were in the water. It's a terrible responsibility for a fellow—almost drowning a girl."

"Well, maybe you upset Evvy, but it seems to me that it was Evvy who upset the boat," I replied trying to laugh it off. "She's perfectly all right. Now why don't you take a little nap before dinner? You've nothing to worry about. You were a hero and saved her."

"You think that makes up—for anything?" asked Neal sitting up among his pillows and seizing my hand.

"Of course." I replied, pushing him down among the pillows again and kneeling with my head beside his red curls as sleek and disciplined now. Then I whispered, "Neal, darling—I've such good news for you. I was with Phoebe yesterday for lunch. And I think she—I think if you were to be very nice—Oh, Neal, laddie, what's the use of beating about the bush? Phoebe still cares for you. Isn't that wonderful?"

La-May Face Powder (French, Poudre L'Ame) Stays on Better Than Any Other

The Cinema Murder

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

CHAPTER VII.

SOMETHING of his overnight's optimism remained with Philip when at eleven o'clock on the following morning he was ushered into Elizabeth's rooms. It was a trailing yellow locks and pathetically leaning on Neal, looked to me more like part of a stage setting than a girl who had been saved from death at the edge of a millrace.

A Quieting Effect

Neal was quiet and solemn now. Actually, he seemed terrified as he strolled along back of us with Evvy clinging to him. I wanted to help him and to tell him that everything was all right, but the pathetic Evvy held the centre of the stage and I couldn't oust her from it.

Out of the City

"I want to go out of the city—into the country, at once," she told him feverishly. "The car is waiting. I ordered it for a quarter to eleven. Let us start."

"Of course, if you wish it," he assented.

He opened the door but before she passed through he leaned towards her. She shook her head. His heart sank. What could there be more ominous than this!

"I am not well," she muttred. "Don't take any notice of anything I say or do for a little time. I am like this sometimes—temperamental, I suppose. All great accomplished are temperamental. I suppose I am a great actress. Do you think I am, Philip?"

He was following her downstairs now. He found it hard, however, to imitate the flippancy of her tone.

"The critics insist upon it," he observed drily. "Evidently your audience last night shared their opinion."

She looked intently at him for a moment.

"I forgot," she went on. "You are very chivalrous, aren't you?

You wouldn't ask questions. . . .

See, I am going to close my eyes. It is too horrible here, and all through Brooklyn When we are in the lanes I can talk. This is just one of those days I wish that we were in England. All our country is either suburban or too wild and restless. Can you be content with silence for a little time?"

"Of course," he assured her. "Besides, you forget that I am in a strange country. Everything is worth watching."

They passed over Brooklyn Bridge, and for an hour or more they made slow progress through the wide-flung environs of the city. At last, however, the endless succession of factories and small tenement dwellings lay behind them.

"Stop here, close to the side of the road, John. Stop your engine, please, and go and sit by the lake."

The man obeyed at once with the unquestioning readiness of one used to his mistress' whims. For several minutes she remained silent. She had the air of one drinking in with almost passionate eagerness the sedative effect of the stillness, the soft Spring air, the musical country sounds, the ripple of the breeze in the trees, the humming of insects, the soft splash of the lake against the stony shore. Philip himself was awakened into a peculiar sense of pleasure by this, almost his first glimpse of the country since his arrival in New York. In front of half forgotten sensations warmed his heart. He felt suddenly intensely sympathetic, perhaps more sensitively tender than he had ever felt before towards the woman by his side, whose hour of suffering it was. His hand slipped under the rug and held her fingers, which clutched his in instantaneous response. Her lips seemed unlocked by his slight action.

"I came here alone two years ago," she told him, "and since then I often, sometimes to study a difficult part, sometimes only to think. One moment."

She released her fingers from his, drew out the hatpins from her hat, unwound the veil and threw them both on to the opposite seat. Then she laid her hands upon her forehead as though to cool it. The little breeze from the lake rippled through her hair, bringing them every now and then faint whiffs of perfume from the bordering gardens.

"There!" she exclaimed, with a little murmur of content. "That's a man's action, isn't it?" Now I think I am getting braver. I have something to tell to you, Philip."

She paused for a few minutes. There was a loud twittering of birds. A rabbit who had strolled carefully through the undergrowth scurried away. A car had come through the wood and swept past them, bringing with it some vague sense of disturbance. It was some little time before she settled down again to her story.

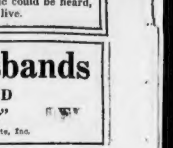
Studies in Husbands

By HELEN ROWLAND

2. The "Gay Deceiver"

Copyright, 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.



HE is the most devoted husband in the world!

In heart and in fact he is perfectly loyal to his beautiful and attractive wife.

(For the wife of the "Gay Deceiver" always IS beautiful and attractive!)

And he wouldn't exchange her for a whole bevy of fluttering squabs!

But he'd DIE if he thought you suspected this!

Because, somehow,

Having proved his prowess and demonstrated his fascination for the susceptible sex

By marrying a "heart-wrecker,"

He is dizzy with triumph and thrilled with a sense of his own fatal charm!

And so he goes about smiling meaningly at all of them,

Patting Daisy on the shoulder tenderly,

Holding Maizie's hand as conspicuously as possible,

Squeezing Dolly's elbow as he escorts her across the street,

Kissing Polly under the mistleto,

Calling Molly "Dearie" and "Little Girl" over the telephone,

And flirting outrageously in the conservatory with Flora,

Being careful first to choose a spot in full view of the next room

Where everybody may gaze in and exclaim,

"What! That gay dog, Cholly, at the old game?"

It is his secret conviction that all women "would fall for him"

If they weren't "too noble," or "too cold," or "too prudish," or "something"—

And that each of them is concealing a "hopeless passion" for him.

And his wife discreetly lets him remain under this delusion,

In the perfect confidence that she holds him with ties that never can be broken—

With a leash that he wouldn't HAVE broken for a million dollars!

He is SO happy in his alluring vision of himself,

As a "gay deceiver,"

That she wouldn't shatter his illusions for worlds!

And not until the day when she places the wreath of purple immortelles at his head

Will she ever admit that he IS a "devoted husband"—

The most devoted husband in the world!

Oh, yes! He is a "gay deceiver"! But it isn't his WIFE whom he deceives.

It's himself—

And the "other woman"!

The Valley of the Giants

Thrilling Romance in Which a Girl Helps Win a Big Logging Fight

By Peter B. Kyne

"For cold, calculating business reasons, my dear," he hesitated a moment and then resumed: "A few months ago I would not have told you the things I am about to tell you, Shirley, for the reason that a few months ago it seemed to me that you were destined to become rather friendly with young Cardigan. When that fellow desires to be agreeable, he can be rather a likeable boy—lovable, even. You are both young, with young people who have many things in common and are thrown together in a community like Sequoia, a lively friendship may develop into an ardent love; and it has been my experience that ardent love not infrequently leads to the altar."

Shirley blushed, and her uncle chuckled good-naturedly. "Fortunately," he continued, "Bryce Cardigan had the misfortune to show himself to you in his true colors, and you had the good sense to dismiss him. Consequently I see no reason why I should not explain to you now what I considered it the part of wisdom to withhold from you at that time—provided, of course, that all this does not bore you to extinction."

"Do go on, Uncle Seth. I'm tremendously interested," averred Shirley.

Bought Timber

"Shortly after I launched the Laguna Grande Lumber Company—in which, as your guardian and executor of your father's estate, I deemed it wise to invest part of your inheritance—I found myself forced to seek further for sound investments for your surplus funds. Now, good timber, bought cheap, inevitably will be sold dear. At least, such has been my observation during a quarter of a century—and old John Cardigan had some 20,000 acres of the finest redwood timber in the State—timber which had cost him an average price of less than 50 cents per thousand.

"Well, in this instance the old man had overreached himself, and finding it necessary to increase his working capital, he incorporated his holdings into the Cardigan Redwood Lumber Company and floated a bond issue of a million dollars. They were twenty-year 6 per cent. certificates; the security was ample, and I invested for you $200,000, in Cardigan bonds. I bought them at 80 and they were worth 200; at least, they would have been worth 200 under my management——"

"How did you manage to buy them so cheap?" she interrupted.

"Old Cardigan had had a long run of bad luck—due to bad management and bad judgment, my dear—and when a corporation is bonded, the bondholders have access to its financial statements. From time to time I discovered bondholders who needed money and hence unloaded at a sacrifice; but by far the majority of the bonds I purchased for your account were owned by local people who had lost confidence in John Cardigan and the future of the redwood lumber industry hereabouts. You understand, do you not?"

"I do not understand what all this has to do with a railroad."

"Very well—I shall proceed to explain." He held up his index finger. "Item one: For years old John Cardigan has rendered valueless, because inaccessible, twenty-five hundred acres of Laguna Grande timber on Squaw Creek. His absurd Valley of the Giants blocks the outlet, and of course he persisted in refusing me a right of way through that little dab of timber in order to discourage me and force me to sell him that Squaw Creek timber at his price."

"Yes," Shirley agreed, "I dare say that was his object. Was it reprehensible of him, Uncle Seth?"

"Not a bit, my dear." He was simply playing the cold game of business. I would have done the same thing to Cardigan had the situation been reversed. We played a game together—and I admit that he won fairly and squarely."

"Then why is it that you feel such resentment against him?" Shirley inquired. "He merely annoys me. I

"Oh, I don't resent the old fool, suppose I feel a certain natural chagrin at having been beaten, and in consequence cherish an equally natural desire to pay the old schemer back in his own coin. Under the rules as we play the game, such action on my part is perfectly permissible, is it not?"

Tit For Tat

"Yes," she agreed frankly, "I think it is, Uncle Seth. Certainly, if he blocked you and rendered your timber valueless, there is no reason why, if you have the opportunity, you should not block him—and render his timber valueless."

The colonel banged the table with his fist so heartily that the silver fairly leaped. "Spoken like a man!" he declared. "I have the opportunity and am proceeding to impress the Cardigans with the truth of the old saying that every dog must have his day. When Cardigan's contract with our road for the hauling of his logs expires by limitation next year, I am not going to renew it—at least not until I have forced him to make me the concessions I desire, and certainly not at the present ruinous freight-rate."

"Then," said Shirley eagerly, "if you get a right of way through his Valley of the Giants, you would renew the contract he has with you for the hauling of his logs, would you not?"

"I would have, before young Cardigan raised such Hades that day in the logging camp, before old Cardigan sold his Valley of the Giants to another burglar—and before I had gathered indubitable evidence that neither of the Cardigans knows enough about managing a sawmill and selling lumber to guarantee a reasonable profit on the capital they have invested and still pay the interest on their bonded and floating indebtedness. Shirley, I bought those Cardigan bonds for you because I thought old Cardigan knew his business and would make the bonds valuable—make them worth par. Instead, the Cardigan Redwood Lumber Company is tottering on the verge of bankruptcy; the bonds I purchased for you are now worth less than I paid for them, and by next year the Cardigans will default on the interest.

"But what will the Cardigans do then, Uncle Seth?"

"Well, long before the necessity for such a contingency arises, the old man will have been gathered to the bosom of Abraham; and after the Cardigan Redwood Lumber Company has ceased to exist, young Cardigan can go to work for a living."

"Would you give him employment, Uncle Seth?"

"I would not. Dou you think I'm crazy, Shirley? Remember, my dear, there is no sentiment in business. If there was, we wouldn't have any business."

"I think I understand, Uncle Seth—with the exception of what effect the building of the N. C. O. has upon your plans."

"Item two," he challenged, and ticked it off on his middle finger. "The Cardigan Redwood Lumber Company owns two fine bodies of redwood timber widely separated—one to the south of Sequoia in the San Hedrin watershed and at present practically valueless because inaccessible, and the other to the north of Sequoia, immediately adjoining our holdings in Township Nine and valuable because of its accessibility." He paused a moment and looked at her smilingly.

"The logging railroad of our corporation, the Laguna Grande Lumber Company, makes it accessible. Now, while the building of the N. C. O. would be a grand thing for the country in general, we can get along without it because it doesn't help us out particularly. We already have a railroad running from our timber to tidewater, and we can reach the markets of the world with our ships."

To Investigate

"And so——"

"I must investigate this N. C. O. outfit and block it if possible—and it should be possible."

"How, for instance?"

"I haven't considered the means, my dear. Those come later. For the present I am convinced that the N. C. O. is a corporate joke, sprung on the dear public by the Trinidad Redwood Timber Company to get the said dear public excited, create a real estate boom and boost timber values. Before the boom collapses—a condition which will follow the collapse of the N. C. O.—the Trinidad people hope to sell their holdings and get from under."

"Really," said Shirley, demurely, "the more I see of business the more fascinating I find it."

"Shirley, it's the grandest game in the world."

"And yet," she added musingly, "old Mr. Cardigan is so blind and helpless."

"They'll be saying that about me some day if I live to be as old as John Cardigan."

"Nevertheless, I feel sorry for him, Uncle Seth."

"Well, if you'll continue to waste your sympathy on him rather than on his son, I'll not object," he retorted laughingly.

"Oh, Bryce Cardigan is able to take care of himself."

"Yes, and mean enough."

"He saved our lives, Uncle Seth."

In Order to Save

"He had to—in order to save his own. Don't forget that, my dear." Carefully he dissected a sand-dab and removed the backbone. "I'd give a ripe peach to learn the identity of the scheming buttinsky who bought old Cardigan's Valley of the Giants," he said presently. "It'll be hanged if that doesn't complicate matters a little."

"But suppose," she persisted, "that the real builder of the road should prove to be Bryce Cardigan, after all. What would you do?"

Colonel Pennington's eyes twinkled. "I greatly fear, my dear, I should make a noise like something doing."

"Suppose you lost the battle?"

In that event the Laguna Grande Lumber Company wouldn't be any worse off than it is at present. The principal loser, as I view the situation, would be Miss Shirley Sumner who has the misfortune to be loaded up with Cardigan bonds. And as for Bryce Cardigan—well, that young man would certainly know he'd been through a fight."

"I wonder if he'll fight to the last, Uncle Seth."

"Why, I believe he will," Pennington replied soberly.

"I'd love to see you beat him."

"Shirley! Why, my dear, you're growing ferocious." Her uncle's tones were Indian with banter, but his countenance could not conceal the pleasure her last remark had given him.

"Why not? I have something at stake, have I not?"

"Then you really want me to smash him?" The Colonel's voice proclaimed his incredulity.

NEW CONVERSE WORK CHARMS

Boston Composer's Symphony Fanciful and Artistic; Bedetti Skilful Soloist

By FRED J. McISAAC.

A new and interesting symphony by a Boston composer, Frederick S. Converse, was the feature of yesterday's program at Symphony Hall. Mr. Converse wrote in C minor. It seemed to me that this composition contains the best work that he has done since the "Mystic Trumpeter." The central idea is a musical expression of some of the emotions and trials of our young people during the war. There is no effort at description or program music, but the moods and feelings of the symphony suggest something of the sort. To my mind the second and third movements are the most attractive, the scherzo being quite delightful and ingenious. Mr. Converse's instrumentation throughout is noted for its cleverness and skillful use of the colors of the different orchestral voices. The finale is very impressive.

Jean Bedetti, the new French cellist of the orchestra, was soloist and in the performance proved that that instrument gave evidence of exceptional talent.

SCOLLAY SQUARE OLYMPIA.

Well-loved writer that he was, every product of the pen of Richard Harding Davis stepped as a matter of course into the "best-seller" class and ran through many editions. It is only natural, therefore, that his "Soldiers of Fortune," produced as film form, should meet a reception at Gordon's Olympia which makes necessary a second week's showing next week at the Scollay Square Olympia.

The Olympia News Weekly and a brand new comedy complete the photoplay program. The Four Meegie Girls head an exceptional bill of vaudeville; June Mills and company appear in "A Prince for a Day"; Bert Bron present their novelty, "The Man Who Wrestles with Himself"; Lamey and Pearson appear in "A Tale of Two Cities," followed by Mallen Case in "Another Good Man Gone Wrong."

LANCASTER THEATRE

The offering for the first three days of the week will be a picturization of the famous stage success, "The Only Law Tree." Viola Dana, who plays the stellar role in this film, is one of the foremost stars on the screen. "The Willow Tree" is a production fully worthy of her talents and the Paramount Artcraft Special, "Behind the Door," is the companion picture.

CENTRAL SQ. THEATRE

It takes a far more versatile person to be happy in a tenement district than it does on Riverside Drive, Amy Burke, played by Mary Pickford, discovers this in "The Hoodlum," which will be seen all next week at Gordon's Cambridge Central Square Theatre. (As Amy Burke Miss Pickford is the pleasant-mannered social equal of the Cambridge Crowd, but as Mary Regan she is a vivacious little hoodlum of the Bowery district.) Miss Pickford is the star of the picture, but she will be George Walsh in "The Shark."

LOEW'S GLOBE THEATRE

George Walsh in "The Shark," a thrilling story of love and hate, together with Anna Lehr in "The Veiled Marriage," head the program for the first half of this week at Loew's Globe Theatre, Washington street, near Boylston. "The Shark," a Fox production, unfolds a tale of the daring of the seamen aboard the oil tramp steamer Aurora, and more particularly of the adventures of Ben Wade, the mate, Shark Rawley (George Walsh).

BURTON HOLMES IN RUSSIA

Burton Holmes will close his regular season here with "Vanished Russia" as his topic. He has chosen to make this a particularly interesting study of Great Russia, picturing Russia which has probably passed beyond the return, and will accompany it with glimpses of the Russia of today, torn with internal revolution. The itinerary of Mr. Holmes' course will take his audiences via Russia Poland and through Czecho-Slovakia on to Petrograd.

HOWARD ATHENAEUM

There will be a live wire burlesque show offered at the Howard Athenaeum beginning this week, in which will serve to introduce Arthur Lanning one of the most versatile chaps on the burlesque stage. Billy Kelley is another favorite and Helen Vent of Joe Darcey in "A Corker in Cork," and he always dispels the gloom and brings peals of laughter. Ray Welch and company, late star of "Potash and Perlmutter," is here for a one-act comedy, "The Prodigal Father," and Bernard Granville, the Cincinnati orchestra, and in addition supports Welch's symphony orchestras of its own. The management of the Philharmonic, America's oldest symphonic organization, would like to visit Boston at deast once a year, but cannot do so unless Boston music lovers support it in greater force.

The advantages of being able to compare different symphonic conductors and orchestras, and to study different interpretations of the great classics are obvious, yet in Boston visiting orchestras are rare and not always well supported.

If the public which is interested in symphonic music is limited, the management of this orchestra will personally requesting the patronage of persons whom it believes ready to do their part in the cause of music.

Other Theatres

"LINGER LONGER LETTY"

Charlotte Greenwood, who will be well remembered by Boston playgoers as that elongated, knock-kneed comedienne who two seasons ago scored such a pronounced success at the Shubert Theatre in "So Long Letty" will of Monday night, February 2, return to Boston for a limited engagement of three weeks at the Majestic Theatre, in her latest and unquestionably greatest musical comedy success, "Linger Longer Letty." Miss Greenwood is without doubt the most distinct and unusual comedienne on the American stage and has yet to have an imitator.

"GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE"

"The Girl in the Limousine" will come to the Plymouth Theatre, following "Au Fait." This farce comes from New York with the original cast, including John Cumberland, Doris Keayon and Zelda Sears. This is another A. H. Woods' production and was written by Wilson Collison, author of "Up in Mabel's Room," and Avery Hopwood in collaboration.

WALDORF THEATRE

The program for next week at the Waldorf Theatre will consist of five big vaudeville acts and a mammoth photoplay production. "Playthings of Passion," starring the beautiful Kitty Gordon. This entire bill will be changed on Thursday when five new acts of big-time vaudeville will be presented together with the latest William Russell release, "Brass Buttons," which stars this popular photoplay star in a pleasing comedy of New York life. The vaudeville program for the week is the most elaborate ever seen in Scollay Square side of the regular big-time house of this city.

N. Y. PHILHARMONIC.

For the first time in four years the New York Philharmonic Orchestra is to play in Boston, at Symphony Hall, Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 4.

New York gives Boston's great orchestra a cordial welcome, and in also friendly rivalry with Philadelphia and Cincinnati orchestras, and in addition supports its own symphony orchestras of its own. The management of the Philharmonic, America's oldest symphonic organization, would like to visit Boston at deost once a year, but cannot do so unless Boston music lovers support it in greater force.

The advantages of being able to compare different symphonic conductors and orchestras, and to study different interpretations of the great classics are obvious, yet in Boston visiting orchestras are rare and not always well supported.

If the public which is interested in symphonic music is limited, the management of this orchestra will personally requesting the patronage of persons whom it believes ready to do their part in the cause of music.

Mr. Hearst Tells How England Can Moderate Anti-British Sentiment in America

The London Times discusses editorially the question of anti-British sentiment in America. It calls upon Lloyd George to "do something" to overcome it.

For the English government to overcome the anti-British sentiment, which undoubtedly exists in this country, there is not so much necessity for it to "do something" as for it NOT to do something.

The English government can very much moderate the anti-British sentiment in America simply by CEASING TO DO the things which create anti-British sentiment.

Within the week in these columns there has been enumerated a considerable, though incomplete, list of the things which tend to make the American people distrustful of the British government.

And, as was said in that editorial, the American people are not in the least antagonistic to individual Englishmen. They like them. But they are antagonistic to the British government.

Of the various causes for American antipathy toward England, perhaps the most important of those mentioned were England's attempt to influence American opinion and definitely to deceive Americans by biased propaganda, and England's efforts impudently to meddle in America's political and domestic affairs.

Lloyd George, therefore, is not going to improve the popularity of England in America by resorting to more propaganda, if that is the idea that Lord Northcliffe has in mind when appealing to Lloyd George. More propaganda would merely mean more resentment on the part of Americans toward England.

Nor is American friendliness toward England likely to be developed by the latest attempt of England's representative in this country to help select as a candidate for President of the United States a man whom England likes and wants.

What would English people think of an Ambassador of the United States to England who would sit in at a luncheon where the candidacy of a man for the premiership of England was launched, and would try to participate in the selection of a man for that essentially English office who was particularly friendly to America, who had lived a great part of his life in America, and who would probably be useful to America in the position of Premier of England?

It is impossible to conceive of an American Ambassador having the effrontery to do such a thing, and it is equally impossible to depict the state of rage and indignation which the English people would be in if ever an American Ambassador should do such a thing.

Of course, Americans are so used to a certain patronizing and domineering and interfering attitude on the part of England that they do not resent it as much as they should resent it, although Sackville West was given his passports in Cleveland's time for endeavoring to mix in American politics.

It is a far cry from Cleveland to Wilson, however, and there is no reasonable doubt not only that Viscount Grey will not be given his passports, but that he probably sat in at this luncheon with the knowledge and consent, if not at the invitation, of the Federal administration.

Mr. Hoover is a very good man, and a very able man; there is no doubt about that. But these facts do not in any way justify an English Ambassador in endeavoring to participate in our American politics.

Moreover, most Americans are thoroughly convinced, and probably rightly convinced, that the English Ambassador was not at that luncheon merely because Mr. Hoover was a good man, but because Mr. Hoover was one of those semi-expatriated Americans who had been intimately connected with English business affairs and associated with British public men, and because Mr. Hoover was the favored candidate of an American administration which had been more subservient and more useful to England many times over than any administration had ever been in the whole history of this country since we became independent States and ceased to be crown colonies of England.

There is no difficulty, therefore, in explaining why anti-English sentiment exists in America. And it will continue to exist and probably continue to increase as long as England continues the insolent, interfering course toward this country which has CREATED anti-English sentiment.

Americans know that this United States of America of ours is a very much more important, more powerful, more prosperous, more successful nation in every way than England is today, and that for England to try to run the United States is for the tail to try to wag the dog.

And this is a particularly impudent thing for the tail to try to do after the tail has been amputated for a hundred and forty-four years, as everybody in this country realizes, except, perhaps, the President, and as everybody in England should begin to realize by this time.

There is no disposition in this country to be unfriendly to England without cause.

And, therefore, as we said in the beginning of this article, if England will keep her fingers out of our affairs and not try to meddle in our situations or endeavor to drag us into her difficulties;

If she will take care of herself and not attempt to lay all her burdens on our back;

If she will create her own army and navy at her own expense and not expect us to pay for the creation of these weapons which may at any time be used against us;

If she will come down to a realization and admission that she is in no way any better than we are, if as good, and in no way entitled to six times the representation that we would have in a League of Nations or in any other international assembly;

If she will stop hypocritically declaring that "blood is thicker than water" at the very moment that she is making treaties with nations of Oriental blood like Japan, directly aimed to injure nations of Caucasian blood like this United States; if she will stop talking sentimental nonsense about "hands across the sea," when her hands are always extended empty and grasping, while our American hands are always expected to be stretched out generously full of gifts and benefits;

If she will just tell the truth and play fair and be as friendly toward us as she expects us to be toward her, American antipathy toward England would probably disappear, and the two nations could doubtless co-operate in a spirit of genuine goodwill.

But asking the English government to behave in the above sincere way is asking it not to be England, and Americans very generally have come to doubt whether England really wants a friend among nations which it cannot use entirely selfishly and to its own advantage.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Here Is How England Really Feels Toward the United States

By Universal Service.

London, Jan. 31.—The real feeling of Great Britain toward the United States at last is coming to the surface.

The very latest outburst is an article in this week's issue of JOHN BULL by its editor, a member of Parliament. JOHN BULL, which has a circulation of 2,500,000 in England, reflects British opinion as few journals do. This is the article:

By HORATIO BOTTOMLEY.

In the West we may witness one of the most amazing political complications of our time, worthy of the closest study by all who have at heart the safety and honor of Britain.

As regards Admiral Sims' disclosures, Secretary Daniels' bold disclaimer carries no conviction. I am fed up with Uncle Sam. The time has come for plain speaking. I see no reason to flatter the vanity of this strutting race by lauding their part in the war, hailing the American President as a genius in world politics and pretending to discover in Washington virtues absent from every European capital.

"The Lie That 'America Won the War.'"

What was the attitude of the United States when the Kaiser struck his blow at the independence of Belgium? The sham of American inaction in that fatal hour will stand forever as a monument to infamy before which in the centuries to come every decent American should hang his head in shame.

While the United States government proclaimed neutrality, every factory and arsenal hummed with activity, so that her coffers might be swelled with gold from the allies.

Yet from a million lips and a thousand news sheets men hear and read today the lie that "American won the war."

Is this common honesty? While America declined to honor her obligations in peace, as she hesitated to share the burden of war, the following is a sample of the political pabulum served up to the readers of the leading United States papers every morning:

"We have no reason to fear British ambition, British arms and British sea power if we successfully resist British propaganda and British intrigue."

And here is another choice sample of sweet and brotherly affection, culled, like the first, from the Hearst combine of newspapers which owns the New York American and other prominent American journals:

"I have just faith enough and confidence enough in my own American people to believe that we can lick England and Japan, etc."

British Residents Are Alarmed.

These are not isolated examples. I could go on quoting by the yard from American newspapers and letters from British residents in the United States, who are becoming seriously alarmed.

This epidemic of anti-British rancor coincides with the refusal of the Senate to ratify the covenant, and the decision of "As-Soon-Fight-England" Daniels—warmly approved by Congress—to embark upon warship-building programs that are to stagger creation.

The spectacle is one for laughter by men and angels. I earnestly suggest we should be on our guard against Yankee bluff and should not, in Daniels' phrase, allow Uncle Sam to pull wool over our eyes.

I do not want to talk in the Hearst vein about licking America, but I earnestly ask if America is our friend. Because if not, we had better know it and make our plans accordingly.

When I read in a New York pamphlet that the United States saved the British from a good licking, I have no hesitation in branding the statement as an infamous lie, whose calculated purpose is to embitter the relations between the two countries.

The truth is that throughout the first three years of the struggle America wanted to see which way the fortunes of war inclined, so as finally to come in on the winning side.

Before the judgment bar of history the figures that strutted so largely upon the stage at Washington will be dwarfed into insignificance alongside Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

In England and France the hour produced a man; in America they had to get along with a few pygmies and a professor.

When it came to the point of war, dollars got in the way of men. The banker's shovel came handier than the bayonet.

Americans who entertain the kindliest feelings toward Britain should do their share of shouting, and not leave it all to the Hearsts, the Danielses and other loud-mouthed desperadoes.

As regards the scurrility of the Hearst journals and other organs, if English papers were talking such jingo folly it would be the duty of the government to disavow such sentiment which is fraught with the gravest peril to the peace of the world.

More Truth Than Poetry

Be Good and You'll Be Great

By S. E. KISER

"MY daddy's wiser than most men that ever lived on earth, I bet—
Not countin' grandpa in, but, then, he's not as old as grandpa yet—
And when it's nearly time for bed my daddy reads me funny rhymes,
Or tells me stories he has read that's all about the Olden Times.

"THE Olden Times was long ago when giants lived in forren lands,
And wunst they was a giant who could pull big trees up with his hands,
And he was bad and roamed around and stole the horses and the sheep,
And all the bad boys that he found he carried to his cave to keep.

"MY daddy says that I can get so strong a giant wouldn't dare
To ever come around or let me catch him skulkin' ennywhere;
And all I haf to do is mind and try to do the best I can,
Because the boy that's always kind grows up to be the greatest man.

"BUT that's not all you haft to do; you mustn't never run away;
And when your mother tells you to, come right in the house and stay,
You musn't say things that are bad, because some giant might be near,
And then I betcha you'd be sad—and mebby you would disappear.

"SOMETIMES I ask my daddy why he's not a President or king—
He always was as good as pie, and never did a naughty thing;
But when I mention that he blinks and mother turns away her head,
And then about that time he thinks I'd better hurry up to bed."

Editor Boston American:

RETURNED SOLDIER.

Editor Boston American:
